THE CORAL. BY C. S. PERCIVAL.

Low beneath the waves of ocean Up the coral toileth slow, Heeding not the wild commotion Of his ceaseless ebb and flow :-Through the weary lapse of ages, Yieldeth never to despair, Though the watery demon rages Twixt it and the realm of air.

Not above the deep uprearing Slow majestical, its head, Greeteth it the sunlight cheering O'er it dews of Heaven are shed: And the subject waves are bringing. With a blind, submissive toil, Earthly mold, which, closely clinging. Turns the coral reef to soil.

By the earthquake's hidden throe Still to Heaven approaching nigher From its watery gulf below; Till, at last, a verdant island Sundeth in its beauty there, Where from valley and from highla Goeth up the voice of prayer. Low beneath the sea of being Taileth up the humble soul, High its destiny decreeing With a might that spurns control Mid the darkness thick enshrous Yieldeth not to coward fear, Though an eager host is crowding Twixt it and the upper sphere. Now above the mass arising. Gleams the lightning of its eye, All that haughty host surprising Like the glance of destiny.

Lo ! the subject hearts surrender To its firm yet sweet control; And their willing praises render, Urging on the victor soul. And it riseth high and higher;

Naught its restless ardor tames: Still to heaven ascending higher-Till, at length, its thrilling story Men and angels glad rehearse, And it stands the pride and glory Of th' adoring universe.

Low beneath the seas of error Heeding not the waves of terror Darkly surging to and fro :-Through the lapse of ages weary, Yieldeth never to despair, Though a darkness, thick and dreary, Shutteth out the upper air.

Slow its calm and radiant head, Moral night is disappearing Where its holy light is shed: And the wrongs of former eras, Vanqushed by its heavenly light, Being transformed, their old chimeras, Handmaids now of truth and right.

And it riseth high and higher, With each strife for liberty, Still to Heaven ascending nigher— Heaven, its summit's destiny:— Till it stands a mountain heary, Resting on foundations broad over which a path of glory Leadeth earnest souls to God.

4. It is very unpleasant, or ought to be, to any choir of sensible, modest persons, to be stared at by a whole congregation during singing. Many persons of refined feeling and sensitive natures, in fact, cannot endure it, and will not, therefore, go into choirs, where the unpleasant custom prevails. Many parents seriously object to having their daughters join such heart if not with the lip, uttering simultaneously with the choir every sentiment sung. The choir are mearly to lead the devotion, in this delightful part of performers, and we forget God. Let each one look on his book and sing to God.

6. Another good reason why congregations should not turn around in singing, is the fact that the cus-tom is not a very prevalent one, and often strikes strangers unpleasantly on coming into such a congregation. They are not used to it. They do not know at first what to do with themselves. We have often seen their embarrassment. They are among strangers, perhaps feel somewhat diffident, conscious that many are noticing them as strangers; they have already seen many eyes upon them, and they are trying as much as possible to escape observation. As the congregation are rising around them for the singing, they modestly get up, just as silent as possible, with their eyes glued to their books, trying to the best of to see. But lo! others, directly in front of them, are staring them out of countenance or seem to be, and this is insufferable, and so another and perhaps desperate effort is made to know what the custom of the nouse is; whether it is a general movement, or whether the few immediately around them do not know any better. We have again and again seen all surely unfortunate for a church to keep up a custom which is so contrarato the usage in our churches

7. Hence, also, we object to the custom, because it is extensively regarded as unrefined, or well nigh vulgar. We do not say that it is so. People just as refined as any others may fall into the practice, because brought up to it, or because they have chanced to live where it has prevailed. But many there are that have never seen the custom, or have heard of it only as vulgarity. Such must be repelled from a ter for it. If my turning around to face the singers is even disagreeable to the stranger, who has just come into our church to see how he likes it, my conclusion is that I had better not turn around. It will cost me less trouble; it may add one to our congrega-gation; and I, too, shall like looking directly upon my book and facing the pulpit just as well as any body else, as soon as I get used to it.—N. I. Evun-

Turning Around in Singing.

Several years ago a clergyman from England was on a visit to the churches of this country. The first time he went into a pulpit to speak, he was surprised at the novel mode of worship of our people. No sooner had he given out the hymn than the whole congregation rose to their feet, like a regiment at the tap of the drum, and wheeled around like so many platoons, with their faces to the choir and their backs to the prescher. This was 't foring the music' with

To the habit of turning around to face the choir in time of singing, we have the following objections, which we would be glad to have some congregations, that we wot of, candidly consider, and see if there is not a more excellent way:

1. It is an unnecessary trouble. It would make much less noise and confusion to rise and stand facing the pulpit.
